

Traveling deliberately: Sabre analysis reveals three key trends in the new corporate travel landscape

Sabre has examined how new ways of working are impacting the world of business travel. Our data reveals that companies and travelers are taking a more deliberate approach to business travel than ever before

Longer Business Trips

Corporate travelers are thinking carefully about what is right in terms of length of stay, taking the optimal length of trip to fit in everything they can without overstaying

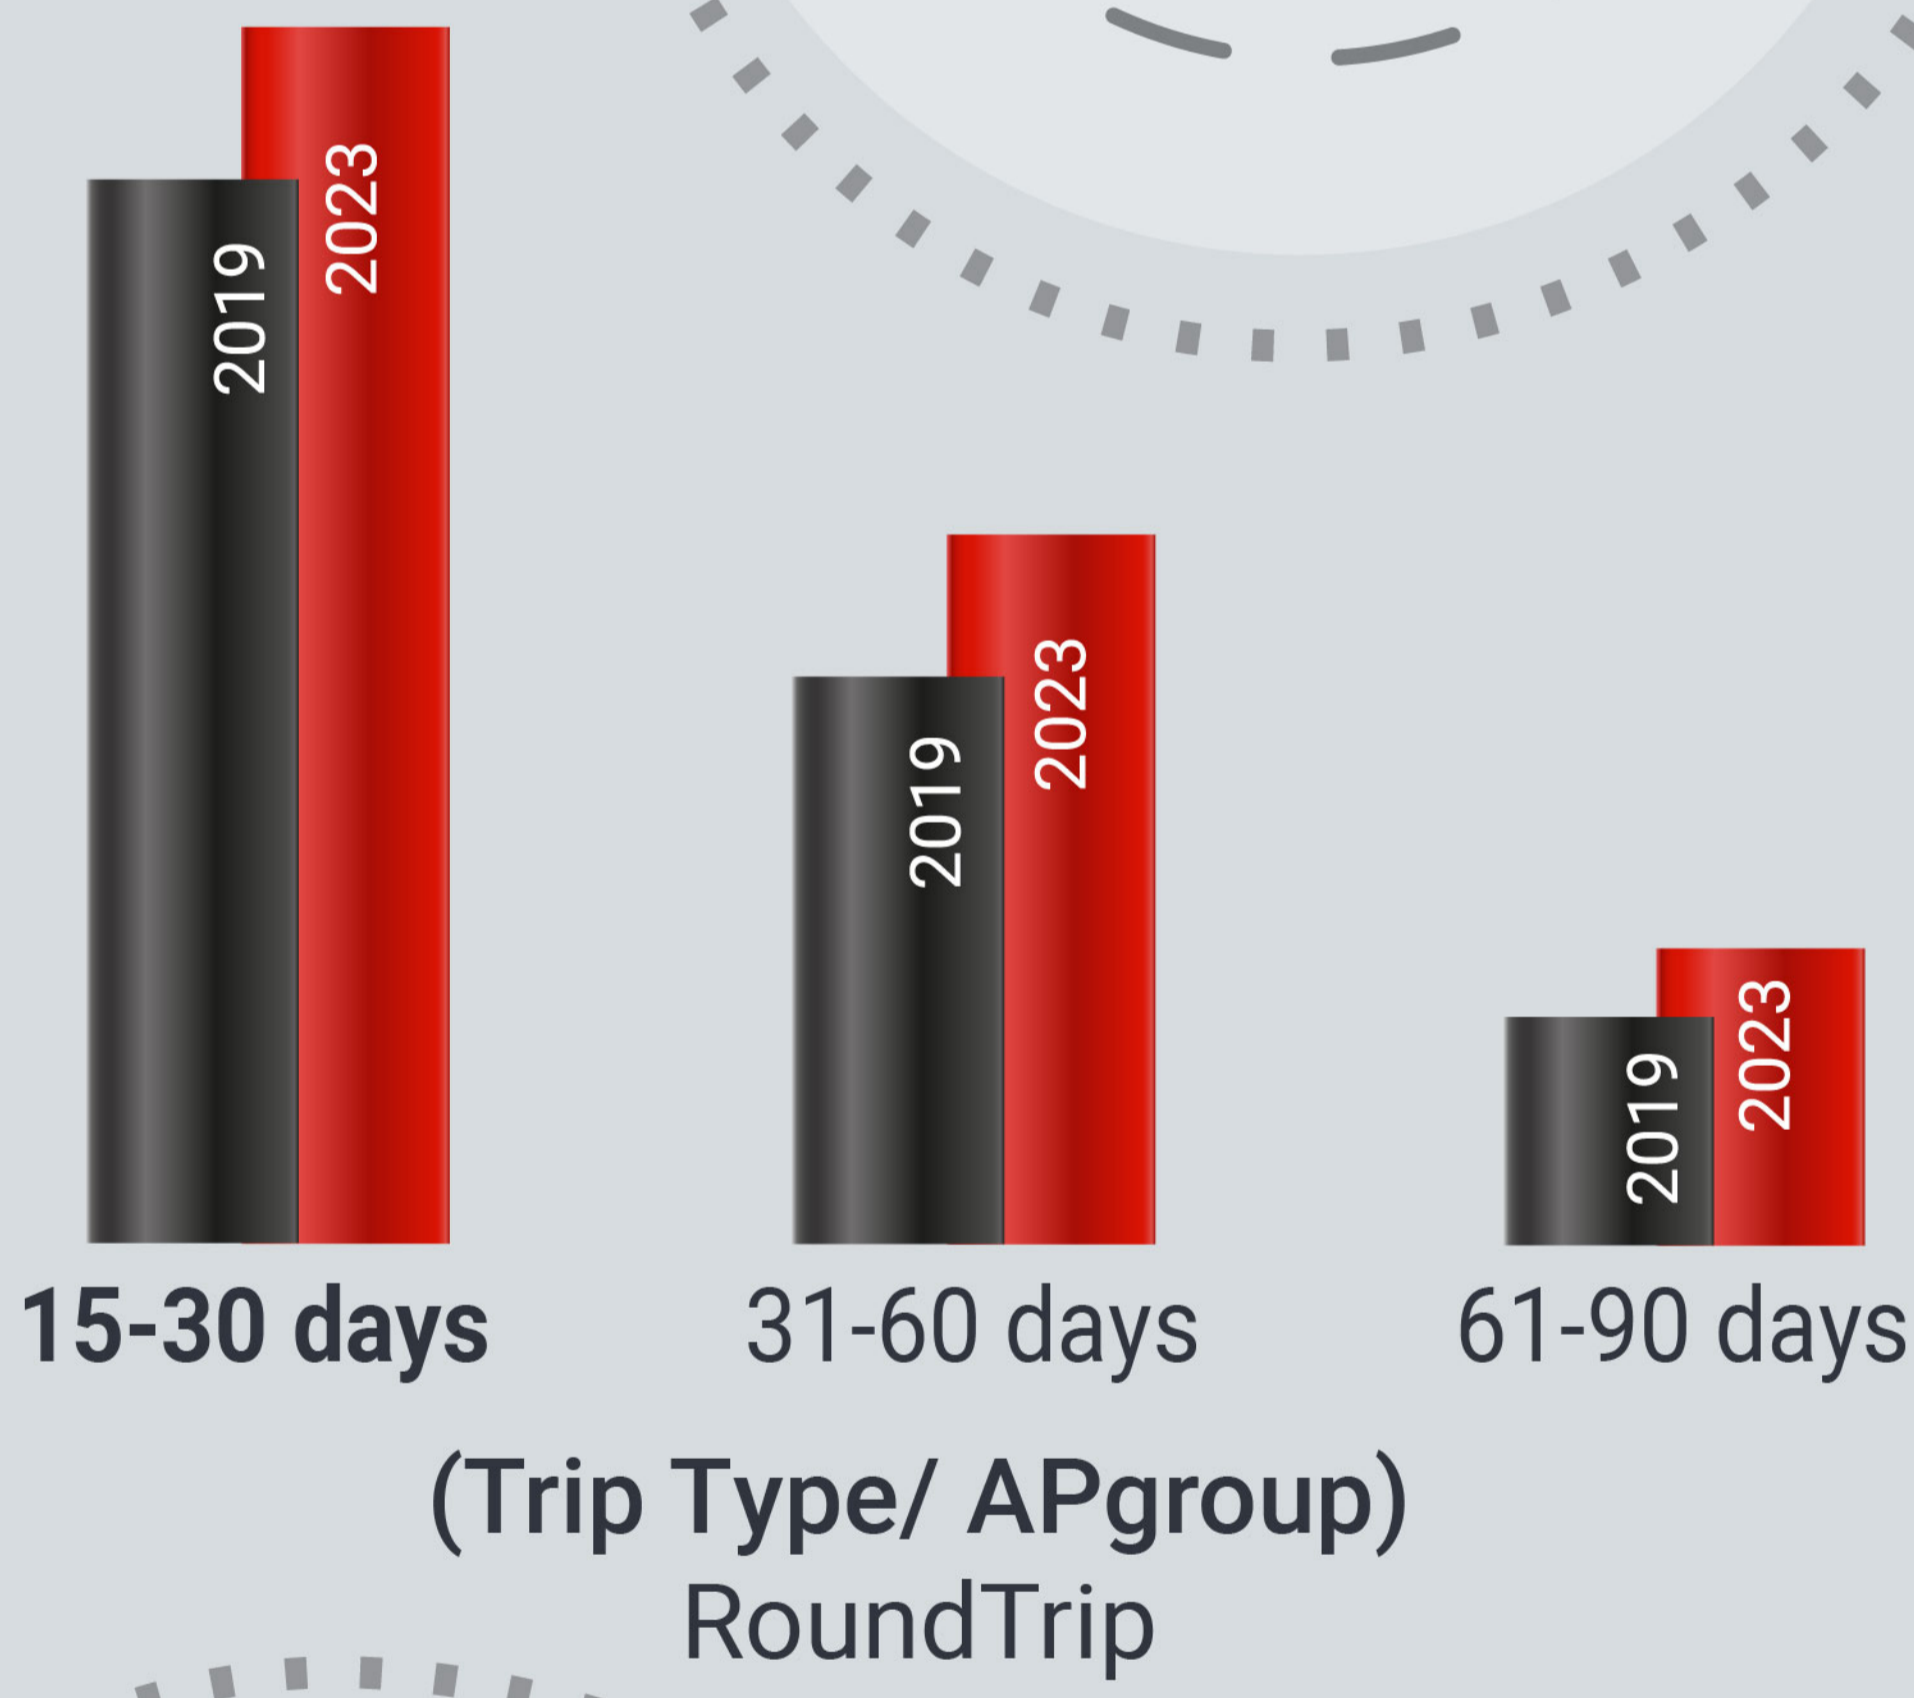

- A stay of two to three days is the sweet spot for most corporate travelers
- Also a slight increase in trips of four to seven days

Planning further ahead

Corporations and travelers are booking further out for business trips than they did pre-pandemic, indicating increased confidence about making travel plans ahead of time

- Majority of business trips are booked within 15-30 days out
- Also notable increase in bookings made more than 31 days out

A higher class of travel

More trips are taking place in higher cabin classes, most notably for international trips
